

In the 2016 edition of this booklet it was said of Britain's coming Freedom outside the EU (page 10):

The Light and Power will Return

The retreat from Commonwealth by Britain over the past forty years and its absorption by the EU has resulted in an increasing eclipse of the light and power which the family of British nations brought to the Free World. In this sense "the sun and the moon have been darkened" (Matthew 24:29), the Sun being symbolic of the (British) Throne of the Lord upon earth (Psalms 89:36) with the Moon, which receives its light from the Sun, representing the law and its freedoms under Magna Carta.

In this prophetic analogy we should be encouraged by the fact that a total solar eclipse lasts only for a short period of time. What we are seeing in 2016 is the diamond ring as the power of the sun to bring light and power to the earth begins to return, ultimately to full glory bringing "blessing to all families of the earth" (Genesis 12:3).

Now in 2021, the darkness of that eclipse is at an end; the eclipse of the Sun, Moon and Stars by European Jurisprudence that undermined our unique British Constitution for 47 years is over – light and power is returning to the Earth.

(Matthew 24:29-31)

The following two articles by leading members of the government at Westminster confirm that ‘Britain’s coming Freedom outside the EU,’ envisioned by our 2016 campaign edition, was fulfilled on 1 January, 2021.

“This is the LORD’S doing; it is marvellous in our eyes” (Psalm 118:23).

Brexit heralds a new chapter in the story of British democracy

This new deal, which restores sovereignty to the UK Parliament, is a triumph for the country

SUELLA BRAVERMAN The Sunday Telegraph, 3 January, 2021

The jurisprudence of the ECJ will no longer take precedence in the United Kingdom’s higher courts

Konrad Adenauer, first chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany who transformed his country into a democracy after the Second World War, said that every nation had its genius and that the genius of the British people was for democratic politics.

It was the British who began the tradition of parliamentary democracy, now emulated all over the world.

It was also Britain that led the Industrial Revolution, championed free trade, and fought protectionism. All because of that British genius for democracy: the belief in the rule of law, the rights of the individual – and of individual enterprise – and our scepticism about excessive regulation and interfering government.

With Britain's departure from the EU and the new Trade and Cooperation Agreement we begin the next chapter in our story of democracy, marking a new sovereignty which, like our history, will lead to a fairer and more prosperous society.

The new deal restores sovereignty to the UK Parliament for the first time in more than 40 years [actually 47 years or 60 displacements in Divine Time Measures], illuminating our autonomy – and Parliament's solemn responsibility to the people. Our membership of the EU muddied the waters of accountability, making it easy for UK elected politicians to pass the buck to Brussels, effectively denying the British people full democratic representation.

Gone is the EU's well-chronicled 'democratic deficit' from our territory. No longer will EU Directives, Regulations or laws from the European Commission and Parliament – many ill-suited to our economy – be imposed on us via rubber stamping in London. Free to make our own laws now, we will tailor them to British needs. They will be mandated by Parliament and managed by British ministers who will be fully responsible for them. Transparency will empower the British people and a revitalised democracy will invigorate our legislators.

The new Treaty makes it clear that the UK and EU are not harmonising their laws. There will be no obligation on the UK to apply EU law. In legal terms, EU concepts of direct effect and the supremacy of EU law no longer form part of our law. The jurisprudence of the Court of Justice of the European Union will no longer take precedence in the UK's higher courts. This reflects a seismic shift – which will become apparent over time – in our law-making. The thousands of judgments handed down by the Luxembourg Court every year – interpreting EU laws, determining questions on regulations in areas as varied as competition, health and safety, manufacturing, and the environment will no longer bind our judges at home.

Further, the new Treaty is drafted in terms of international law, not EU law. This is crucial. Disputes will arise regarding the practical effects and precise meaning of legal wording. They will be resolved, not by European Court judges, but by an independent arbitration panel, made up of panellists nominated by the UK and the EU. The panel will determine disputes according to principles of international law, not EU law. For this Treaty expressly states that it is to be interpreted in accordance with the customary rules of public international law, including those codified in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties. This is the right framework to govern a new relationship of friendly co-operation between equal and sovereign partners. This is a different world from the one in which we have lived as an EU Member State.

All these aspects may appear, at first blush, quite dry. But they go to the heart of whether the UK, in signing, ratifying, and implementing this new Treaty, has regained its freedom. By virtue of these constitutional and legal changes, this new relationship with the EU is one defined by fundamentally more liberty for our people and more sovereignty to our Parliament. It also reflects the reverence that our political leaders hold for the British electorate. The British people made their wishes clear in 2016 and 2019. They were not ignored, dismissed or undermined by those in power. The British were brave and never flinched in the face of crisis, opposition, and attempts to subvert. Their request was bold and it has been granted by this government.

As the Prime Minister [Boris Johnson] said in his 'Painted Hall Speech' in Greenwich on 3 February, 2020: "We are embarked now on a great voyage, a project that no one thought in the international community that this country would have the guts to undertake." That time seems like another world – but the great project of securing free trade with Europe, while preserving our sovereignty, is now, finally, complete. What comes next is up to us and us alone. As a nation, we are on the cusp of another journey – of rebuilding, reforming, innovating, exporting, of discovering new markets and new ways of seeing the world. There is now a huge opportunity for us to emphatically embrace this new freedom and sovereignty as we write the next chapter about the British genius for democracy.

Why Brexit Britain will be able to crack down on illegal immigration

As a fully sovereign nation, Britain can look to the future with hope and optimism. Our course is now set to grasp the freedoms of Brexit and steer a new path built on the opportunities that lie ahead

PRITI PATEL The Sunday Telegraph, 3 January, 2021

As we start the New Year as a fully sovereign nation, we will all reflect upon the year we have left behind and look to the year ahead with hope and optimism . . .

Telegraph readers have stood by the Government in our determined quest to leave the EU and follow our own destiny in the world once again while upholding the will of the British people by taking back control of our money, our borders, our laws and our waters.

The public have patiently endured more than four years of wrangling, rancour, division and perpetual debate. From the 2016 referendum through to the 2019 general election, they have continually reminded us elected politicians of the importance and responsibility we hold to protect our democracy and ensure that its institutions deliver for them.

Throughout this period they, along with Parliament, saw variations of “Brexit” offered up repeatedly as an attempt to tick the box and move the Brexit debate on. Those options did not deliver what the British people voted for – freedom to take back control of our money, borders, laws, trade and fishing waters. It was therefore inevitable that some Members of Parliament, myself included, did not support those options.

While we knew this change would not be easy, we did know that to secure change of this scale would require leadership brave enough for the task. Finally, we have a deal secured by the Prime Minister [Boris Johnson] which has been approved and put into statute by Parliament and which fully delivers on what the British people voted for in the referendum and at the last election.

It is a deal that will deliver for families and businesses in every part of the UK with the first free trade agreement based on zero tariffs and zero quotas that has ever been achieved; a deal that guarantees that we are no longer bound by EU rules, that there is no role for the European Court of Justice and that we will have full political and economic independence.

Our innovative British businesses and entrepreneurs will be able to take full advantage of the opportunities created by being an independent trading nation, able to strike trade deals with partners all around the world.

Forging a new relationship with the EU also means taking back control of our borders, allowing Britain to finally control who comes into this country. Free movement has ended and people who want to live in the UK will now have to meet the requirements of our new points-based system.

The UK has done what many said was impossible and struck a truly unprecedented deal with the EU which gives our police and security services the tools and partnerships to help keep the public safe. Having left the EU means we can give these agencies stronger powers to keep this country safe and protect our homeland security.

That includes banning foreign criminals who have served more than a year in jail from entering the UK. We will refuse to accept notoriously insecure national identity cards and will be able to crack down on illegal imports of goods through the introduction of pre-arrival data on goods being imported from the EU into Great Britain.

We will also crack down on illegal immigration and reform the broken asylum system which only encourages people trafficking into the country through dangerous and illegal routes.

From now on, there will be no more British opt-outs, vetoes or net annual payments to Brussels, but instead a new relationship between two sovereign equals and the freedom to trade, create new opportunities and set new standards as pioneers of science and research with control of our country's own great destiny.

At the start of this new chapter in our nation's remarkable history, my message is one of hope. As a global trading power and the fifth largest economy in the world, for centuries our wealth has come from our ambition, entrepreneurial skills and global reach.

Every lesson of history has shown that freedom and free trade are the greatest engines of prosperity and advancement. Our course is now set to grasp those freedoms and steer a new path built on the opportunities that lie ahead.
